As a child, growing up in Phoenix, Az., I drew on every scrap of paper I could find. My one goal was to be a professional artist. Drawing was a way to escape into different worlds, more exciting than my own. It was a way of expressing my emotions. Much of my work is an expression of those emotions and based on my life's experiences.

My Christian faith, that has always sustained me, is what inspires my Christian art. I grew up in a Christian home and attending church. Reading the Bible and trying to understand its meaning has been a lifelong journey.

The breaking of God's laws will destroy our world. These paintings are meant to warn against continuing to go in our own way, but to also show the Love of God, with a hope that man will turn to Him.

Bible prophecy, especially Revelation, has always fascinated me. I've always wanted to paint it's meaning. Recently, I've felt that. God wanted me to relate these prophecies to our world today.

Although, I am very involved in Christian artwork at the moment, I am planning several pieces that express my emotions, but also the emotions that others can relate to.

My only formal training was a degree in Photography and several art courses. My skills come from examining other artists work and experimenting.

Until 2008, I have always painted in oil, but am now working in acrylic. I've always enjoyed drawing, and will sometimes do a piece in a drawing medium or mixed media.

I live outside of Taylor, with my husband Dave, who lovingly encourages me in all that I do.
